

THE WRATH OF ANNUNAKI

The Destruction of The Tower of Sin

KENAN KOLDAY

AUTHOR 'S NOTE

This is a short story for the brave who are ready to question what they think they know. The Tower of Babel's destruction has been one of the most important stories in Heavenly Religions and Mesopotamian myths. We read this well-known story in many different forms but never from the Sumerian God's perspective who demolished it.

Here is your chance to learn the Sumerian mythology and how it influenced the course of heavenly religions fir ever after the Babylonian Exile.

Please note that all the names and places are derived from Sumerian myths. None of them represent any real persons. Moreover, the book does not contain any criticism of any belief systems and doctrines. It is a science fiction story that takes place a long time ago in an unknown imaginary time and place.

Seat comfortably and read an untold story.

This short story is from the 2nd book of my ROBOT WITH A SOUL TRILOGY which is an esoteric sci-fi book on artificial consciousness. Here is a short summary of the trilogy.

The 1st book is GARDEN OF EDEN. It portrays a new world rising from the ashes of a destroyed human civilization after WW3, or what others call the Armageddon. Artificial consciousness, together with advanced robotics, enable a period of wealth and inner journey for people to remember their true origins.

The 2nd book is THE BABYLONIAN EXILE. The name of the book is to point out to the ancient story of Jews in exile in the city of Babel, which changed the history of Heavenly Religions forever. However, our story, which takes place in Babylon of 2075 A.D. is very different and is about the self-discovery of a soul in the human body.

The 3rd book is ARTIFICIAL MESSIAH. There is a profane message that will change your life in that book.

With love,

Kenan Kolday

LIV

V.I.T.R.I.O.L.

Sometimes the children listen to the sounds of a machine as if they watch Mozart's symphony and sleep with that regular repetitive sound. Similarly, Adapa fell asleep with the enchantment of the soft sound and the vibration of the low-noise engines while the military transport rose above the dark clouds that looked like the messengers of the wrath of Sumerian Gods coming to tear down the Tower of Babel.

He began soon after his head fell down as a sign of deep sleep. In his dream, he was in space, like an observer waiting to watch what would happen a little later.

The Moon revolved around Earth as a silent witness of cosmic events as usual. Thousands of craters on her sad face that were the only proof of the Moon's millions-of-years-long testimony made her more than a silent observer.

She was neither in a fight with her glorious past because of these wounds, nor was she arrogant like a young soldier showing off her scars from the war. A simple moon she was, dancing around a beautiful planet in a marvelous solar system and acting her role with love like an admirable actress. Her eternal dance was no different from a theater spectator acclaiming a magnificent show with a noble and silent whistle to prove the ancient hypothesis of Pythagoras, the unique voice of the planets and the Moon.

The icy calmness of the cold space at 2.6 Kelvin (-270.45 Celsius) was suddenly disturbed by the stargate opening across the Moon's dark side. First, it was a small point in space, attempting to break the eternal silence of the solar system. Like a stone creating series of waves on the surface of a calm pond, the small energy point turned into a gigantic spiral of energy, heralding its mysterious guest within seconds. Like a whirling dervish, the spiral of energy was lighting up the Moon's dark side with a crisp white light. The giant spiral of energy, which radiated energy like the mirror of Snow White's evil stepmother, turned into a window showing an unknown place in the universe.

It would be interesting to hear comments from Nesimi, who said, "I go out to the sky to watch the sky and go down to the Earth to watch the sky," if he saw a cosmic window like this, opening to another part of the universe.

It was a wormhole - a stargate that allowed its passengers to travel from a distant part of the universe to another within a short time. This disturbance in space-time continuum could enable space travel faster than the speed of light, turning the massive universe into a mega-amusement park. Although the speed of light was the highest known speed in the universe, some particles moved faster than the speed of light, such as tachyons. For those who could harness the secret powers of the universe, the universe was a cosmic village. Black holes, one of the biggest mysteries of the universe, could be used as interplanetary space highways by the technologically-advanced civilizations. The higher dimensions of the universe, beyond the visible universe, and even parallel universes, were new playgrounds for these being.

If you knew how to focus a tremendous amount of energy to create an artificial black hole and then connect it with an existing black hole in another part of the universe, you would create a wormhole to travel to that location faster than the speed of light. A journey that would normally take millions of years for a mortal would only take a few hours. It was like folding a paper and piercing the folded paper with a pencil. With this technology, the flat space-time continuum would behave like a folded pencil. The pencil would then become the magical wormhole. All you had to do was travel from one end of the universe to the other. Perhaps the universe would not be so big if physics rules would permit traveling such seemingly endless distances. God had a solution to any problem like a cure to an illness of ignorance. Bayezid Bistami was right. Although searching would not always give the answers, it was the seekers who could succeed in the end, without getting stuck on obstacles.

The first problem with using this technology was to open a black hole, one of the most significant destructive forces in the universe, without being swallowed up by it. Moreover, the immense energy required to activate such a wormhole in space made this secret power accessible only to galactic civilizations.

Besides opening a black hole and keeping it running for a specific period was another matter, perhaps a harder one. As long as the destination was unknown, a black hole would show its strength like a mighty wrestler fighting back and guarding the entrance of this space highway. The laws of the universe would not let a wormhole to exist unless it had a final destination. This destination could both be another part of the same universe or another universe called the parallel universe. For galactic civilizations to master this technology, they would first have to understand the nature of multi-verses and learn how to navigate them if they did not want to end up in another universe with different laws of physics.

Unless you have not been to your destination before and spotted an existing natural black hole, you would have to create a new black hole and build another stargate there to connect both ends of the wormhole. The easiest and safest method was to use an existing black hole as the exit of the wormhole. Building a stargate and a cosmic highway was tough. Therefore, once built, it was sealed only for those who had the keys to use it, resembling the wisdom of an ancient Hermetic quote - The lips of wisdom are closed, except to the ears of Understanding. Only those with the right technology could use cosmic highways.

The stargate opened quietly like a mother walking on her toes to refrain from waking her children up., It was a cosmic door powered by the space station built long ago on the Moon's dark side.

The mysterious traveler of the stargate was beginning to show itself before the Moon's dark object, as a servant preparing to bow down to the Queen. The 342 meters-long black cigar-shaped spaceship slowly passed through the stargate as if all this was a parade.

The stargate closed as fast as it opened when the last part of the spaceship passed through it. All that remained behind was the cosmic radiation, like ashes of fire recently put off. Unfortunately, the radiation evidence could not be followed by those already on Earth, for they didn't have that technology yet. The mysterious cigar-shaped spaceship, passing through the stargate in a horizontal position, slowly came to the upright position.

A smaller spacecraft in the shape of a rugby ball silently took off from an exit at the bottom of the main ship. It flew towards an unknown destination on Earth past the dark side of the Moon. The spacecraft, which was designed only for interplanetary space travel, disguised itself with a veil of invisibility to disengage from the prying eyes of earthlings. The earthlings had to wait for a couple of thousand years more to develop a technology to detect their arrival. For now, they would have to rely on their eyes only.

As he watched the Earth from the top like a movie, Adapa suddenly recognized that he was the commander of the starship. His name was Enki, the son of Anu. He was also a human, yet a person from space.

Adapa could read Enki's thoughts and feelings as well as seeing the world through his eyes. He had mixed feelings inside him as the spaceship approached the surface of Earth. This planet that he called his second home shook him with feelings of sadness and excitement.

They had come to this planet a long time ago. A very, very long time ago. It was the long-forgotten memory of a time when spaceships were sent to many different solar systems throughout the galaxy to find a rare element to save their dying planet. When space scouts discovered that this planet rotating around a small star in the Milky Way Galaxy had the cure they had been looking for, he had immediately traveled Earth. The solution to their problem was gold. The only way to repair the atmosphere that protected their dying world by stabilizing the heat across the planet was to build an artificial protective layer in the atmosphere. That would retain the heat generated by the volcanos and prevent an ice age on his home planet that had a long eclipse around the sun. Earth and Nibiru were cosmic siblings rotating around the same sun. Still, Nibiru's 3,660 Earth-years-long rotation made it a rare occasion for these brother and sister to meet amidst the solar system. Luckily, he was there, and there was a lot of gold on Earth to repair their atmosphere that was getting thinner and thinner in every rotation.

They had worked on Earth for a long time. Thanks to the space base they built on the dark side of the Moon, they were able to build a stargate behind the dark side of the Moon. Because without this stargate, it would not be possible for them to reach their planets in a short time far away from the solar system. The first time they traveled to this solar system, they used a black hole that existed at a safe distance away from the sun and directed it to the wormhole's entrance in their own solar system. After passing their first mother ship through this safe corridor, they built their own stargate behind the Moon`s dark side. This stargate worked with a powerhouse built in the center of the Moon, which was no longer active since they arrived recently.

Once upon a time, the Moon was a vibrant, lively satellite. It used to be Earth's young sister. Unfortunately, she paid a heavy price when they built the powerhouse at the center of the moon to keep the stargate active. The once magnificently beautiful moon died before any earthing could travel and enjoy its long-forgotten charm. As the magma's magnetic power diminished over time, the Moon's magnetic field and small atmosphere that protected it from external influences disappeared. And then the Moon became a tomb for meteorites wandering in space as a safe haven to end their lives, similar to how elephants on Earth died. Those craters, now covering the Moon's surface, saddened all the cosmic passengers of the unknown spaceship.

The spaceship entered the Earth's atmosphere. All crew members were happy to return to planet Earth, where they lived for a long time.

The commander of the spaceship, Enki, thought about the hard and sad day when they left Earth as a result of that big flood. After a while on this planet, they had understood that it was not easy to extract gold. The first ship to come here from the black hole had a crew of 50 people. The exploration equipment on board and the mining vehicles they carried would not be useful without a base on Earth. So, they would have to set up a base first. A small group of them would return to their planets to bring new equipment and supplies to the new base. This spaceship would also bring a new bigger crew to build the stargate base.

However, after coming to this solar system, they did not know that they would fall in love with Mars, whose beauty was legendary. Consequently, another mother ship and a team would come and settle in to establish a new civilization there. Meanwhile, Earth could still serve as a planet where they could rebuild a new civilization when their planets were dying. They also considered Mars. Although Enki had tried to persuade his father, Anu, the king of Nibiru, to establish this new base on Earth, Anu wanted to use Earth only to extract gold, because Mars' nature, gravity, and atmosphere were similar to their home planet. Planet Mars would have been a more ideal place to start a colony for the people of Nibiru.

While Mars had a magnificent nature with amazing plants, simple life forms, especially in its massive oceans, Earth was also home to a prosperous diversity of animals. For Enki, the Earth was special because there were clever apes walking on their feet and hunting as a result of millions-of-years-long evolution from their ancestors, the monkeys. This universal miracle called evolution was proof of the cosmic consciousness behind everything. It always finds its way wherever life started in any form somewhere.

Life on Earth was far from Mars on the scale of evolution. Thus, interfering with genetics to artificially evolve human-like monkeys on Earth to work on gold extraction would accelerate their plans. So, there was no need to bring more people and machines to Earth from Nibiru. Most of the team that came to this solar system was assigned to establishing the space base on the Moon and activating stargate. Therefore, only a group of 50 people could stay on Earth.

So, they landed in an area between the two rivers on Earth, where water was abundant, very convenient for agriculture, similar to their home planet. This region, which was at an optimum distance to the equator of the world, was also at the center of large adjacent land parts.

Enki remembered their joy when they first arrived on Earth. After they entered the atmosphere from the above the equator, a huge ocean first welcomed them, like a hospitable host. They had watched the breath-taking environment as their spaceship hovered slowly over the ocean. The dolphins accompanied them as if they were in a parade. Then they headed north to that big bay between the two lands. Their new home, a big fertile piece of land between the two rivers were waiting for them. Like a mother, benevolently caressing his running boy, this heavenly place enchanted them with her natural beauty.

They were all silent digesting the beauty before their eyes when the spaceship reached the fertile sunny land. Two big rivers, passing through the land, competed with each other to join the big gulf, like kids racing with each other to kiss their mother. The world was a big lively planet, and they could find other beautiful places if they expanded their search. However, they would settle there because it was close to the gold mines they were looking for. Besides, only the areas closer to the equator on Earth offered better conditions to start a base due to the on-going ice age.

Those days, Enki was named Ea, the "Lord of water" due to his leadership to find this paradise suitable to erect the first Earth base. However, he could not see that he would be sent down to the south away from the base to operate the gold mines in a massive piece of land.

When his step-brother Enlil arrived on Earth and became in charge of the new colony, everything changed. This new assignment, which was more like an exile, should not have been the reward for his efforts and dedication. Enki was angry and disappointed. Due to the customs and traditions guiding their lives in their home planet for hundreds of thousands of years, he could not oppose the command of his father, King Anu. Anu recognized and appreciated Enki's achievements but still asked him to follow Enlil's lead. He had experience as a military commander to lead this kind of mission. Enlil was his brother, and Anu was his father. What else could he do? He followed the orders. Beyond everything, Enki was a scientist, one of the best in their home planet Nibiru. Despite the first anger and embarrassment haunting his mind, it was apparent that establishing a base and a mining facility in an extremely hot, yet fertile region could be successful only under his leadership. The project was to succeed if they wanted to save their home planet before things would get worse. Everything depended on Enki's improvisation and scientific experience in this unknown territory that was home to the giraffes, elephants, hippopotamuses, and many other wild animals. The new name given to him was "Lord of the Earth," that is, Enki, and he would always be remembered with this name.

Soon after his assignment, he built a temporary base in place in a place they called Abzu. After the transport of mining equipment, gold extraction had started, allowing Enki more time to observe natural life. They were not alone in that wilderness. Those apes walking on their feet, living in small tribes, hunting collectively, and communicating with body language were as curious as Enki and his team to learn about them. Suppose they did not have curiosity attracting them to come closer and watch them despite the great fear of the unknown. How could they reign the world after Anu ordered them to leave this planet?

The humanoid that they examined would soon be genetically modified to become the prototype of a new mine worker, Lulu Amelu, to take over the dirty work of gold extraction. Some in the Earth colony opposed this experiment for moral reasons. Enlil, his brother, and biggest rival from the very beginning stated that getting involved in the evolutionary process of a world would mean interfering with the Grand Force's supreme art. According to him, interfering with the evolution of nature had to be avoided. The stringent timelines and the robust nature of the work in the mines, bringing Enki's team to the verge of a rebel, convinced Anu to make the final decision. The experiment was approved to go live to modify a big group of earthlings from the apes genetically.

Lulu Amelu was genetically designed to become the new human species with improved intellectual capabilities and would soon reproduce to populate the world to work for the visitors from the stars. These hunter-gatherer ferocious human beings could now walk and run upright, think strategically, make plans, develop a complex language and communication, socialize, create a culture, develop tools and weapons, build villages, and dominate the wild nature with their new advanced emotional and cognitive capabilities. To achieve this within a short time, Enki had to mix the genes of his species with the humanoids' genes to accelerate their natural evolutionary process. Nevertheless, the new humans were no match to their creators by knowledge, skill, and brain capacity. However, they were given all they needed to follow the footsteps of their cosmic masters' footsteps and reach their mental and technological capabilities within a few thousand years if they were given enough time to find their path. Knowing this, Anu had only one condition to approve the project - the new human species must not have the gene of longevity. Hence, they would not live tens of thousands of years like them.

The genetic modifications had taken longer than what they planned for. Away from their home planet, Enki had found himself working on a theory that was not used before. It was always kept as a theory due to ethical reasons, as highlighted by Enlil. The urgency to supply gold to their planet had changed everything, so they had to prove the validity of the theory first with many tests on animals. Dozens of tests resulted in hybrid beings in life forms never seen before. Giant apes with one eye only, humanoids whose lower body is a horse, lions with eagle's head, gorillas in the wolf form, and many other strange beings who did not live long enough were some of the failures of these experiments. Anu told Enki to stop these trials in regret. According to him, the mother cosmos had not given her consent to succeed in their unethical quest even to save their dying planet. They had to take another course to use the miracles of their advanced technology to come up with workers to help their small team in gold extraction in the mines.

Following the directions of King Anu, Lulu Amelu, the working man, was created in their likeness to be master of all that is on Earth. However, the first experiments were not successful because the first humans could not reproduce by themselves. Somehow, a genetically modified man and a woman, coming together, could not give birth to a child.

The solution had come from Anu again, saving Enki and his research team from a long period of fruitless striving. When he visited Earth after the opening ceremony of the stargate behind the Moon's dark side, he gave a piece of incredible advice at the meeting that evening.

"Let us follow the Grand Force's path, who created the universe from oneness. He created the cosmic duality from oneness and then the plurality from duality to give life to the neverending harmonious dance of the opposites. Instead of creating the male and female separately and make them unite, let's first create the male, and then create the woman from his genes. Use the cells from the ribs that surround the heart, for the heart is the home of the Grand Force in our bodily temples. Follow the wisdom of life, my children. The Grand Force will lead us. Let's see what is going to happen."

Anu was right once again, and this time Lulu Amelu was ready to reproduce and spread on Earth. That's when they called the first Man, Adapa. They placed Adapa and his wife in an idyllic place on that fertile land called Edin. They gave them everything to succeed - shelter, ready-made food, clothes, etc. All their basic needs were provided unconditionally. They would provide whatever else they needed if they did not break that golden rule.

Oh, how could they resist the urge of curiosity? The curiosity that attracted them to Enki would almost cause their destruction. They were not to enter the Forbidden Temple of secrets in that heavenly area. In Edin's experimental environment, all they were asked to do was to live as they wanted. They did not know that they were in an experiment, the last test before sending them to the world to start the first human settlement.

They were probably set by opponents of this experiment to enter the Forbidden Temple. Otherwise, these two naive people's minds and hearts could not be deceived that easily because they could not yet distinguish between good and evil, right and wrong. The rivals of Enki, who wanted to spoil the purity and naiveness of Adapa and Enki, were successful in their efforts to prove Anu that this project was a mistake from the beginning. They had been against any interference to the Grand Force's holy work, and now Anu could witness it with bare eyes. Adapa and his wife were expelled from Edin and sent to a life in the middle of wild nature. They would have to work from now on to make a living, which was very much different from their lives in Edin. Adapa would suffer by toiling and sweating.

Frustrated with the first man and his wife, Anu got angry also with those who set them up to go to the Forbidden Temple. He sent the servant of Enlil to live in exile in a remote part of the world, intending this decision to make his judgment for Adapa and his wife fairer.

During and after this unfortunate event, everyone had missed asking an important question - why did Anu ask Enki to forbid Adapa and his wife to enter the forbidden temple? Enki would understand the missing link many years later. It was tempting to ask someone not to think of a pink elephant and accuse him of thinking of it. Such a golden rule would serve nothing but a temptation. If they had lived in the isolated and easy environment of Edin, they would not learn the cosmic principle of polarity and the real meaning of work. Both Enki and Enlil, the valued and loved sons of Anu, could never step back from their point of view and become attached more to their ideas. Enki would keep Adapa and his wife longer in Edin with more technical reasons, delaying the gold extraction process. Enlil would find a way to terminate the new couple, even in a safe garden like Edin. Sometimes, an invisible interference with the sequence of events could accelerate achieving results an avoiding further conflicts with a little price. The experiment had finished. Adapa and his wife were in nature to create the first humans to help the cosmic travelers in their quest to extract gold.

Their dying planet had no time to waste. They released Adapa and Lilitu into nature, to the very heart of real life. Nothing was ready anymore for them. That heavenly place was no longer their home and nor could they find the comfort of their lost paradise in the wild nature. They had nothing to do but sweat, strive, and work to achieve what they intend in this life. In the world, they would have to live, learn, and multiply if they wanted to survive.

But Enki also knew that if they left them in the wild alone, they would die immediately. They were no longer the strong wild humanoids who could adapt to wild nature. Enki and his team could not let them alone and decided to help them. Adapa's children called this small team, the watchers - a few assigned servants of Enki dedicated to helping, aiding, and assisting their creation. Meanwhile, neither Adapa nor his family could know the heavy price they paid. Anu had sent them to exile for helping the expelled human species without his consent.

Enki's team invested in developing the intellectual capabilities of Adapa's kindred, replacing the physical strength and agility they have lost, as the price of disconnecting them off from nature. They taught them to make tools, farming and irrigation, and constructing buildings. They taught them ethics. They taught writing and art literature in their most basic form. They passed on the laws to create a civilization and helped them organize the rules to live together peacefully.

Seeing the fast and unstoppable growth of humankind with good and pure intentions, Anu forgave Enki's team, the watchers, and accepted them back to the Earth colony. Enki's game plan had yielded its results, and even Enlil was ready to accept the developing humankind. They were so far away from their home planets in a tough life. The first ones that landed on Earth were already burnt-out. They all needed a new page for a new beginning because their mission would keep them on this planet for a long time. So, Anu permitted humans to live with them. The humans called them the Annunaki, meaning the offspring of An or Anu. He allowed his kindred to marry with the humans and start a family. That would relieve not only the pains of Annunaki on Earth colony but also accelerate the human evolution.

There was another reason behind Anu's decision. Human evolution was necessary for the cosmos because the universe was nothing but a school for the immortal souls to incarnate a body and learn new experiences. The new human life on this planet meant another class in this grand cosmic school. Therefore, Anu had received the Sirius-based Spiritual Hierarchy's consent for interfering with human evolution on Earth. Everything was subject to divine permission. Even a leaf would not fall from a tree without the permission of the Grand Force that permeated everything.

However, neither Anu nor his children could foresee that humans on Earth would over-reproduce and worship them as their Gods. They could never imagine the humans would be caught up in pleasures and become slaves of their animal aspects. Humans were running after domination and power to rule each other. Those from Annunaki who landed on Earth, married to women from the new humankind, and had families lost their way and forgot their true selves. Many Annunaki who had descended on Earth became a slave of material possessions, passions, lust, and acquired all the negative human qualities. Meanwhile, humans who enjoyed the riches of a civilized and prosperous life due to the protection of Annunaki and the knowledge transfer from them became more arrogant, selfish, and pleasure-oriented. It was hard to tell that were Adapa's descendants.

Anu, who was tired of the increasing corruption on Earth, deviation from moral standards, and the cruelty among the humankind, and fall of Annunaki, decided that this program was wrong. It was a mistake to interfere with the evolutionary laws of nature and let his exhausted children start living on Earth with humans. The Grand Power had many ways to deliver his divine message. The fall of Annunaki was the right message for Anu. To correct his mistake, Anu ordered the destruction of the corrupt humankind. Enki, who trusted humans, asked for the last chance to help and awaken them from their illusion. He believed that they could change if they sent truth envoys.

Messengers of the Truth could guide them and show the way out from the swamp they created. However, in Sodom and Gomorra, humans disappointed him. Enki had nothing to do but keeping his promise to his father and order the demolition of those cities. At least, he had tried and offered humans the last chance to survive. Only his loyal follower, one of the descendants of Adapa, and his family were saved. However, the unfortunate woman lost her sight when she did not follow a critical order. They had left the city before weapons of mass destruction were dropped on the sinful cities, and everyone was warned not to look back. She could not do that. Her curiosity, aroused by the sounds stronger than any thunderstorms she had seen before, tempted her to stop and look back to see with her bare eyes. That would cost her a heavy price - loss of her sight. The family was told to wash their bodies in the nearest water they first found as soon as possible and hide underground. Because Anu banned Enki and others from helping them directly, they had no permission but merely to give advice.

Other cities also did not listen to Enki's messengers in the next the 72 years. Knowing his son's compassion to humankind, Anu had given Enki enough time. These 72 years meant one precession cycle was enough to guide humankind out from their sinful illusion.

Time had ticked away so quickly as the sinful humans refused to listen to the messages sent to them. It was now time to correct their mistake. Anu advised Enki and Enlil to use nature's powers to wipe humankind from the surface of the world with a great flood, covering most parts of the world. It would purify the world from dirt and sin with water, the cosmic symbol of Truth.

However, when the Spiritual Hierarchy of Sirius ordered Enki to save humanity, he saved them from the Deluge. He asked Ziusudra, the King of the Shuruppak, to build a giant ship to save saving his family, the last remaining innocent humans on Earth and the animals on Earth. The Grand Force and his divine hierarchy had given another chance to humanity - the last chance they are to use in the right and the best way to build a world of peace and harmony. Those few survivors would have another chance to start again in a new world. Suppose Enki did not reach out to Ziusudra despite the risk of severe punishment from his father. In that case, the new human civilization could no longer exist.

While that big flood enveloped the world, Annunaki had already left the world with their spaceships. They watched all the events from Earth's orbit and the Moonbase.

The great flood was devastating. It wiped all humans and their sinful cities from the world except a ship full of a small group of people and animals from most species on Earth. The ship was like a nutshell in a big ocean that could easily drown by the giant harsh waves. But they survived somehow. Most probably, they would not have survived if The Grand force was not with them.

Then the waters of the giant ship sat on top of a big mountain as the Deluge stopped and the waters retreated. It was not long before his brother, Enlil, found Enki's game and landed on Earth to confront Ziusudra. Enki followed his resentful brother, who could do anything to end the sinful humankind. Enlil was wrathful and asked for an account. However, Enlil was not a stupid man. He was as strategic and pragmatic as his anger was. The burden of delayed gold extraction on Earth and Annunaki's reluctance to work in the mines gave humankind another chance. Enlil allowed them to build a new civilization and persuaded Anu. If they had survived the great flood without help, it must have been the Grand Force's will, nothing else. He was the one to know the best; he could see and hear everything in the cosmos. How could they disobey His Holy Will?

And then Enki helped people to sprout again in the world through knowledge transfer and provision of necessary tools. However, Anu and Enlil could no longer allow Enki to remain on Earth. He would return their dying planet to prevent the unpreventable. Seeing that his beloved children have survived, returning to Nibiru to save their dysfunctional atmosphere was not a punishment, but a reward. His son Marduk, who was already married to Ninlil, would remain on Earth to look after his children. Enlil had already left the world with their father, Anu, and Enki and Enlil's children would lead the world and rebuilt the human civilization.

Who could tell that Enki and Enlil's sons Marduk and Ninurta would fight with each for world domination and lead the world to a nuclear disaster? When the newly established human civilization collapsed once again, Marduk and Ninurta received orders from Anu to leave Earth and humankind to their own evolution. Only a small group would watch humanity from the facility on the Moon's dark side and keep the stargate open. That team on the Moon base would leave their places to robots a while later.

All these memories of a forgotten past ended when the spaceship approached Babylon. Enki and his team wondered what was happening to the world ever since. Although they could monitor the humans from space and see the new civilization, it was different to see closely with their eyes. Enki watched them for a long time as a father who had not seen his children the spaceship hovering over the city of Babylon. His children could not see the spaceship that was disguised inside an artificial cloud. Who would think of looking up in the sky when they had so much to do in such a vibrant city?

Babylon was like an organized ant colony that would look like chaos at first glance to an inexperienced eye. Streets were like rivers of people flowing to their unknown destination. That's why Enki loved and chose this species to be Lulu Amelu. Despite a tendency to follow the dark sides of their ego, they had a pure essence guiding them to their divine destination. Humans would never give up and start again, no matter how many times they failed. As the Annunaki, it was in their genes to stand up from the ground they fell and rise above their ashes with a stronger will to succeed with the lessons learned.

The prosperous land between the two powerful flowing rivers was the same beautiful natural wonder as before - wetlands, full of flowers, sunny weather, fertile lands surrounded by many forests, and vibrant villages full of life.

After screening all this land and beyond with the invisible spaceship, they returned to Babylon. Enki ordered the crew to monitor the activity at the center of the city, where humans were building an incredibly high tower. For a reason that was not yet clear to Enki, his father had asked him to visit Babylon only to learn more about this tower, which was visible from far away. Anu wanted to learn the reason why it was built.

They landed their ships in a forest on a high hill that no one could see. That inhabited and hard-to-climb hill was one of the last places for humans to visit. It made it a great landing location for Enki and several of his men to start their short journey to Babylon. The ship, along with several senior officers under Enki's command, would not stay there and wait for them above Babylon until Enki called them for pick-up in another location.

Followed by two generals, three Majors, and a scientist, Enki walked in the streets of Babylon, disguised as a local trader, as he used to wander in this magnificent city in the past. Under the crystal-clear blue sky, the seven foreigners were like nomads enjoying smells coming from delicious food, loud talks of trades negotiating bluntly with each other, and the authentic music coming from the tents in the bazaar. Enki remembered how much he missed this vibe.

The mysterious company wandered for a long time in the city during the day. He spoke to many local people from all walks of life - from children in the streets to priests, soldiers to prostitutes, shopkeepers to civil servants, and youngsters to elders. Locals still spoke the language when Enki and his kindred left the world. Despite a long time, he could speak the language.

Anu had asked Enki to learn why humans built that glorious high tower in the middle of the city, glowing from afar and attracting all kinds of curious people like a magnet. Anu was a great leader whose wisdom was repeatedly tested in countless situations and circumstances. Enki, proud to be the son of such a father, could not stop questioning his father's intentions this time, because of his strong bond to people this time. He could not understand why his father wanted to learn the answer to such a simple question.

It has been a long time since his father forgave him for not obeying his orders and saving humankind from the Deluge. It was an acceptance more than forgiveness. Anu also loved humans as their father, but because of his leadership, it was sometimes essential for him to make tough decisions to maintain order and bring justice. Only he could tell the traumatic effects of his decision to wipe humanity from the world. Only an insanely cruel leader could allow that without regret. But, those days, humanity was like a deadly illness killing everyone silently. They would kill each other in terrible ways unless he interfered. He decided to save humanity from their dreadful deeds. It was a chance to let them die nobly rather than giving their last breath with a painful death or living in torture. Letting humankind live and start a new civilization after the flood was his mercy to his

At the end of the day, as the sun retreated its lights from the crowded, busy streets of Babylon, the team had found what they were looking for. Boarding the spacecraft, they quickly headed to the main ship waiting on the dark surface of the Moon. Shortly after landing on the cigar-shaped main starship, Enki was summoned by his father to report their findings.

Standing up from his throne placed in the middle of the crystal pyramid-shaped hall, he opened his arms to welcome his son and hugged him. Hall of Wisdom that was more than a pyramid-shaped room. Enki loved the symbolism of this room. Everything in the Hall, even its shape, had a meaning conveyed with symbols for those who were able to understand and read them.

Four elements of the cosmos, fire, air, water, and earth, represented by the four corners of the rectangle at the bottom of the pyramid, connecting at the top to form a pyramid, pointed out the oneness in plurality. The all-seeing eye down below the top of the pyramid meant that everything in the universe was the emanation of the Grand Force, and He was the One. The Hall of Wisdom was nothing but a colossal symbol describing the omnipotent Grand Force, the grand architect of the universe, and the owner of the universe and all realms, that created everything from nothingness. The pyramid was an excellent way to show His universal language - mathematics.

The lights falling from the top of the pyramid to the corners of the rectangle at the bottom were the lights of Creation. They showed that He was the source of everything, and everything emanated from Him. He, the Absolute Truth, was the one source and final destination of everything. Every living and nonliving being in the universe was in a quest after his Truth that was visible in his every manifestation. The hall was made of crystal to remind the mortals that the Grand Force is eternal Light and pure Love permeating everything. There were no secrets for those who could see beyond looking. It was the consciousness of the beholder that could decode these universal secrets. The universe had no lies and nothing to hide like a grand open book. The Truth was universal and one because it belonged to Him. All was Him, and He was All.

How unfortunate it was for the humans on Earth to see them as their Gods only because of their technological superiority and live in ignorance without being aware of the One God that created everything. If they knew that the Great Power was the real and only God, they would worship no other god.

"It's nice to see you, Father," Enki replied quickly, putting his right hand on his heart with his fist. This greeting had an important message and a meaning for them. It was associated with the heart, which is the residence of the Grand Force in the human body. The right hand was lifted into the air, making a fist while the hand was up, and pulled back to place it on the heart quickly with neither a hard nor a soft move. It symbolized that the ground and the sky were together. Everything in the world was subject to the permission of the heavens. As above, so below. Four fingers of the clenched fist in the air symbolized the body made of four elements, and the thumb represented the soul encaged in the body. The body without a soul would only be a machine, and the four fingers of a hand would not work without the thumb. The body and the soul were to complement each other for a journey to the higher-self. The slight bowing of the head was to show that they surrender in every breath to the Divine Order and His Will. Everything would be as the Grand Force wished. The entire universe was subordinate to Him. Life was all about living a good, righteous, and kind life with decency as if you were in front of the Great Power. How could one live an evil, sinful, and immoral life if he knew He watched him in every breath? Without decency, morality, consciousness, love, a man would be an animal in human.

Enki shared the details of the short visit to the Earth. Anu, who quietly listened to his words, wanted to satisfy his growing curiosity when Enki finished his word. "Son, did you find out why people built this tower?"

"Yes, Father. People call it the Tower of Babel. Babylon, which means the gate of God, is not ruled anymore by the nation before the great flood. The names of their gods have also changed. Somehow, they deified our children who remained on Earth after we left. That's the humans built the Tower of Babel for my son, who won the last nuclear war. According to what I have heard from a small number of wise people living in the city and knowing the past, sages are against the tower because they see it as a rebellion to the Holy Will of God, who created everything."

During his speech, Enki realized that the humans, who were saved from total destruction a long time ago, were proud of the magnificent tower they built for their son, Marduk. One thing that shadowed this pride was the arrogance he saw a while ago in Babylon before the great flood. The biggest enemy of humans was arrogance. It would have costed their lives unless he betrayed his father's orders to save them.

Sitting like a statue like The Statue of Zeus, Anu was listening to Enki silently, thinking and contemplating at the same time. After sharing the details of the tower, Enki ended his speech by saying, "Each floor of this seven-story tower represents the paths to reach their gods ."

"Interesting. How do humans plan to reach their gods?" Anu started his asking to find the answers he was looking for.

"The meaning of each floor could guide us to understand their intentions. The first floor represents the stone, the second is the fire, the third is the plants, the fourth is the animal, the fifth is the human, the sixth is the sky, and the seventh is the angels."

"How did they plan to reach their gods this way?"

"As far as I can understand, this is an incomplete map life and cosmos for them. It is what they could come up with from the scattered fragments of wisdom that belonged to a time long before the great flood. Among them, some believe that many cycles of death and birth will guide them to the Cherubim. Some humans believe in a single life and try to be a good person to deserve salvation. Others believe nothing, and even deny everything, including their gods. Others live in a way detached from everyday life, only hoping gods to protect their city. Many of those who believe in the main god Marduk are toys of faith traders, false tutorials, and corrupt priests. Others have given themselves to pleasure and joys of life and forgot their true identities similar to humans before the flood. "

Anu, who had been only asking questions until then, remained silent for a while. He took a deep breath while caressing his white beard with his left hand, looking at the all-seeing eye over his head.

"Son," Anu started. "The people of the new world seem to have lost themselves even though they speak the same language. They speak the same language, but they are mentally and spiritually divided. They have forgotten the priceless chance they were given to survive and establish a great civilization. Apparently, they have forgotten the pure Essence they came from and the Grand Force that created everything. And worst of all, they deified us instead of worshipping the Grand Force. For what? This is not what we taught them, son."

Enki did not regret telling his father what he witnessed in Babylon, but it was obvious that humanity was not at the expected level of development despite this tower, a wonder of architecture, they erected. He could only say a few words, "They are just like children who do not know the world. They don't know what they're doing." He had no face to say anything else when the terrible situation was so obvious.

"So how is the humankind doing in decency and morality?" This was a very important question for Anu. A similar conversation had led him to order the destruction of humankind with a Deluge a long time ago. Decency and morality were the only attributes that distinguished humans from animals.

It was quite hard to reply to this question, which had an obvious answer. "There are very few that search after Truth. These few people want to reach their true-self with mind and intuition; they want to reach you with an inner journey.

"You did not answer my question, son," Anu said, reminding him that he did not want his son to dance with words. All he wanted to hear was the truth, pure Truth.

"Father. Unfortunately, decency and morality are deteriorating in the world. Beyond that, as you said, they deified us. After Enlil and I left Earth, they made my son as the main god, because Marduk had won the nuclear war with Ninurta. When Marduk left, the next generations made him a mythological god. My impression is that they no longer know that we are all the children and creation of the Grand Force, and that we are nothing besides His eternity and power. They do not know that all roads lead to Him, not us. They don't know that we are not the Grand Force. And worst of all, they are trying to reach their false god with this tower. "

Anu had his answer. "Humans are paying the heavy price of being our surrogates. They have our flaws. We are only instrumental in the Grand Force's Holy Scheme, creating a new evolutionary environment on another planet in the universe. And that's why we are responsible for their mistakes, son. We did not save them from the flood to live the same sinful life."

"You're right, dad. If we don't do anything, they will spread all over the world one day and destroy themselves. Let's help them again when they're on a path of self-discovery. They don't know what they're doing. They need a compass again. "

Anu stood up from his golden throne, roaring, "They're looking for the force in the skies, not inside themselves. Thus, they find fake god to believe in." Before spelling his last words, he took a deep breath with his hands above his head, looking at the all-seeing eye that symbolized the Grand Force seeing and knowing everything in the cosmos. He rethought and weighed what he wanted to say before words left his mouth. "Then come down to Earth again and destroy that tower! "

Enki, surprised by this sudden command that hit him like a rumble of thunder, said, "Why, Father?" He could ask only with a soft and sad voice. He knew that his father would not decide without considering a topic in various dimensions. One he made a decision, he would not easily step back from his decision.

"This destruction is to remind humans that we are back. I want this intervention to stay in their memories forever to remind them that we will come back again, if they forget the Supreme Creator, lose their identity, and live a sinful life. Let the next generations remember this destruction. However, make sure that this destruction does not harm anyone. Empty the Tower of Babel and its surroundings. With our technology, tear it down. Then, create a series of natural disasters to make them run away from this land and spread all over the world. Thus, it takes a very long time for them to come together again and unify. Separate their language so that they cannot talk to each other anymore and spread their sinful acts. From now on, they will speak different languages so that it is more difficult for them to search and find the secrets of the universe. It will be their test. Because easily learned lessons are easily forgotten, and there is no such thing as easy learning in the process called evolution. Your love and mercy for them now require you to use our technological power with compassion to remind them of the Truth."

"We're talking about 72 cities, Father. It's not that easy," said Enki, without any harmless solution to follow his father's orders yet. His compassion for humans was preventing his innovative mind to come up with a solution this time. He was not convinced at all about this order, but he could not disobey his Father.

"You'll find a way, son, but I can see the confusion in you. Let me guide you this time. Destroy the tower at night when there is no one inside and around it. Let people leave the building with an artificial earthquake before you demolish it. Ignite fear in their subconscious minds to leave the city. Weren't we like them hundreds of thousands of years ago at the beginning of our civilization? Our evolution from animals to humans was not easy at all, and we could not complete this process yet. "

"Can you tell me more what you intend by this destruction, Father? I feel like there is more."

"This entire universe is a cosmic playground of life overflowing from the Grand Force. You know it since the day you were born. Every living being, every world, every civilization, everything that exists, has a particular role and purpose in this game, called life. This game's purpose is to return to the Source with higher consciousness, like a river flowing into an ocean and being one with it. In this way, the invisible cosmic intelligence of the universe expands and grows. We are the droplets of the same cosmic ocean. Like cells of a body working together, we stand together but without an awareness of our unity. We think we are separate from the whole, but we are not.

The humans on Earth are in the first steps of the cosmic ladder of evolution, son. To help them discover their divine potential and become genuine people, we must test them in different environments in the worldly theater. Diversity and migration will provide them with these new conditions when they leave their comfort zones. The spirit of the time and universal principles will take care of it. The polarity of life and the harmonious dance of opposites will achieve much more than our efforts to provide the necessary conditions in their evolutionary journey.

All these difficulties are for them to recognize the divine essence within them so that they wake up and reach the Grand Force. So far, life was easy for them, and they lost their path. This intervention will bring them back to reality. The new game layout will allow us to separate hay and grass ."

"What happens next?"

"When your Babylon mission is over, we will leave Earth. Our planet is dying despite all our efforts, and now we need to find a new home. Suppose the cosmic chaos that Nibiru created during its last entrance to the solar system had not dissipated the atmosphere of Mars and devastated our new colony there. In that case, Mars could have been our new homeland. As you know, news from our reconnaissance ships reported we are very close to finding a planet that will sprout our civilization in the galaxy. I'm giving you the task of finding our new home, son. Go and find our new home as you found Earth."

"So, what will happen to the people on Earth?"

"They will work to deserve the second chance you gave them. They will get tired; they will sweat. They will spread and reproduce around the world, build civilizations, and explore the unknown depths of space with an inexhaustible fire of curiosity as we did thousands of years ago. When they become galactic humans, ready to take the seat in the Galactic Confederation, we will help them again. In addition, the Supreme Realm will take on the task of monitoring their evolutionary activity from now on. Ascended masters who have completed their spiritual evolution on Earth and their Spiritual Hierarchy help them."

"Will we come back again, Father?" asked Enki, hoping to see his children again.

"When humans discern that the force they are looking outside is inside them...

...when they understand that everything is a reflection of the Grand Force in the universe...

...when they transcend the animal aspects of their egos and become genuine humans full of wisdom, compassion, and gratitude...

...then we shall come back to embrace our grown-up children and celebrate their graduation from the school of Gaia.

When the time comes, we will welcome and cherish them as they sit beside us in the Galactic Senate. I wish these days to come soon. So, let it be."

Enki left the pyramid-shaped Hall of Wisdom with that sublime feeling which humans would call philanthropy thousands of years later - the love for humans. It was not a simple love stemming from a blind addiction. It was an unconditional love he had experienced when his son, Marduk, was born. That unconscious yet naive baby had grown into a semi-conscious but passionate adult that brought Earth in the brink of destruction. Humans were no different than Marduk and other Annunaki. Created in their likeness, humans possessed all the defects of their creators. So, how could they get angry with something they created with the same flaws they had? How was it possible for them to look into a mirror and feel upset with the image in the mirror?

Despite all this love of human beings, he had to help them find the light again. This time they had to learn it the hard way, even harder than the Deluge that wiped them from Earth with an instant yet noble death.

He left Anu's presence, reminding himself of the necessity to discipline his son, Marduk, who had also fallen on a dark path, taken over by extreme desires, huge passions, and unsatisfiable ambitions.

As he walked in the long white corridor, connecting the Hall of Wisdom to the Command Center of the mother spaceship, he had already started thinking about Anu's order. Demolishing the Tower of Babel would be a difficult one to execute. Still, he would do it whatever it would take. A strong leader was one who could make tough decisions.

He woke up and heard the captain speaking to inform the passengers that they are about to land. As the aircraft approached Izmir, like a mother eagle flying back to its nest to feed her hungry children, Adapa's heart shook excitement again. He was back to his heaven, his paradise, that he missed so much after months of exile. This beautiful city, the princess of the Aegean as Victor Hugo depicted, had a special place in his heart due to something spiritual connecting with something deep inside him. Words were not enough to describe this invisible bond. This part of the world, which had been the crossroads of an endless number of civilizations that shaped the world history, had been like a sponge that swallowed all their wisdom and learning, mixing them in the pot of Izmir to prepare the drink of gods, ambrosia, for its lucky inhabitants and visitors. What else could one find in that glorious city other than joy, the color of life, tolerance to diversity, peace, and serenity, freedom of thought, speech, behavior, and belief? Izmir had been and was a heaven for the free and creative minds throughout history and today.

After the aircraft landed, he would have enough time to enjoy the city and spend time with the great family he had in Hastinapura.

What was that story that lasted for hours or perhaps days in his dream?

He had suddenly found himself in the Babylonian era thousands of years ago. Beyond that, the dream was from the view of ancient Sumerian mythological Gods. It was a mind-blowing experience to see all these events from the eyes of a Sumerian god and witness the never-ending humanlike battle inside him. The technologically galactic humans whom people on Earth called gods were only a creation of Allah, God, YHVY, Brahma, or, however, you name Him, the Supreme Creator.

Were the Annunaki real?

Did they really create the first man and his wife?

Did they really destroy the human civilization with the great flood?

How could one-million-year-old Homo-Erectus turn into Homo-Sapiens and gain a diverse set of complex skills quickly after a few million years of very slow evolution? Was there a cosmic fingerprint in this massive change in such a short time?

How could humanity, which remained the same for the last 200,000 years, suddenly develop the sophisticated culture in the Middle East and Central Asia that would typically require thousands of years to mature?

Could the Annunaki be the unknown builders of the old ruined bases discovered on the Moon and Mars after the Third World War? Or were all these new games of Adapa's recently-developing consciousness? Perhaps, they were inspirations decoded as dreams to tell him something.

Either dream or a reality, but he knew this dream was a messenger dream. Understanding this, Adapa focused more on the theme of the dream than the details, the message he remembered the most.

The man did not need to search for Almighty God outside him. This soul, bestowed to him, was a gift from Him to humans. The one who could see and reach this divine spark inside him could hold the Divine Hand extended to him.

All he needed to do was return to his essence and contemplate what he learned from all sources of Truth, such as religions, science, philosophy, art, alchemy, mysticism, occultism, and applying them to his life. Neither thought was, nor just action was sufficient alone. Success depended on planting the mental seeds before actions.

Adapa recognized the fact that what he had been looking for was already inside him. He now knew that he had the answers. All he had to do was to search after Truth with an inner journey.

"As above so below," Hermes had said.

Vedas wrote. "The one that knows a piece of clay will know the whole clay." If everything were the parts of the whole, then the parts should contain the information of the whole like the cells in a body containing the knowledge of that body.

He remembered the verse that Belgin told him about the Holy Qur'an, "Allah is closer to us than our jugular vein."

"And, We have already created man and know what his soul whispers to him, and We are closer to him than [his] jugular vein."

Surah Quaf Qaf 50:16

"How could God be closer to us than the jugular vein?" he thought. Being closer than the jugular vein seemed to have a profound meaning that was not immediately apparent to the beholder at first glance.

The only answer he had was that God was in us, in our hearts. Allah, who saw and heard everything, was already in everyone. Somehow, we did not notice His presence despite all the messengers that guided us for thousands of years. Just as a fish swimming in the ocean without knowing it is inside an ocean, we lived a life without knowing that we were swimming in His cosmic ocean.

With this new enlightenment, Adapa could now understand why Socrates exclaimed, "know thyself."

Islam's prophet Muhammad, the last of all prophets, had a similar quote, "the one who knows himself knows his Lord.". This message was the cure to all the suffering on Earth.

It was now time for Adapa to go on an inner journey and find the Alice's Wonderland inside him. This land was the only place where he would find the spark of God bestowed on him. Neither Fizan, Mecca, Baghdad, Beijing, the Moon, nor Mars, Almighty God, the one source of everything, was the only destination. The gateway to Him was to reach his spiritual essence; that is his soul. The spark of God in him was his spirit. As above, so below. Symbolically, the man was at the center of Solomon's Seal as the child of the heavens and Earth. His soul was like the first step of Jacob's ladder, waiting to be found inside him to lead him to the Grand Master of the Universe.

Amazing. We had all the keys, the hints, the paths, and guidance inside us. Still, we kept living in illusion, ignorance, dogma, bigotry, superstition, false-belief, and attachment, which led to separation from the divine Source and our true identity. It was similar to living like an insane beggar in the streets, living on tiny crumbs of leftover food from the rich's tables while having gold bars in our pockets.

No matter how long it could take, he would strive to find his hidden treasure. Trying, working hard, and persevering was the only way. He knew by his heart that he would find the long waiting Jacob's ladder inside the corners of his ego's labyrinth. It was there waiting to be discovered. This his ladder that would leave the seeker to Truth and God was extended to everyone, even evil ones. It was always there, like the sea surrounding an unconscious fish that is searching for water.

After that mysterious dream, he felt more grounded like the recently-landed aircraft resting on the platform now. He was shown something in his dream. Many ancient and late pharaohs showed themselves as God on Earth or the caliph of God. Before them, many societies had imprisoned the omnipotent, omniscient, omnibenevolent, invisible, immanent, infinite, eternal, immutable God to man-made totems and legends, and invented the mythological gods. Even the Heavenly Religions came under the jurisdiction of a single tribe, and the messengers who shared the divine message were deemed, God.

Adapa made a decision. He had found what he was looking for in the search for the Truth, and his first job would be to talk to Belgin when he arrived at Eden Lab. He would learn more about Sufism, the 1400-years-old wisdom teaching that reflected its effects in Belgin's everyday situations and attitudes. For this, he had to learn that universal Islam in Anatolia, not the veiled Middle-Eastern version but the esoteric version of it. Anatolia, which had been the crossroad of many of the most influential civilizations in the world's history, had been a unique melting pot for people and cultures but also religions. According to Heavenly Religions, monotheistic religions had started in Harran, the southeastern Anatolia, with Abraham. According to recent archeological findings, first organized sanctuaries were in Gobeklipete 12,000 years, unlike how they expected the historical timeline to progress.

He would learn the last religion of God that accepted all the prophets and previous religions. Islam was the religion that considered God beyond everything instead of deifying a person and did not belong to a single nation or a society, but all of humanity. It was the only way to learn the secrets of Sufism because Sufism was like a beautiful dress on the body of Islam and would lose its meaning without it.

His journey was to unite with God and there were many paths to Him suitable for everyone as long as the person was willing to follow a path. Adapa would continue his quest after Truth with Sufism because it was all about love, acceptance, benevolence, tolerance, service.
